

On the plane-width of graphs

Marcin Kamiński

Map vertices of a graph to (not necessarily distinct) points of the plane so that two adjacent vertices are mapped at least a unit distance apart. The plane-width of a graph is the minimum diameter of the image of the vertex set over all such mappings. We study this notion and establish a relation between the plane-width and the chromatic number of the graph.